Harris Obesity Prevention Effort

Established in 2005 by the J. Ira and Nicki Harris Family Foundation, the Harris Obesity Prevention Effort (HOPE) is a multidisciplinary program at the NYU Child Study Center and NYU Langone Medical Center to prevent childhood obesity. Under the leadership of Laurie Miller Brotman, Ph.D., HOPE brings together a world-class team of scientists, clinicians and educators to develop and test innovative intervention strategies for combating this complex and costly public health epidemic. HOPE programs empower families and teachers to help young children by establishing healthy behaviors (nutrition, physical activity and sleep) that will protect them from the long-term psychological and medical consequences of obesity. As HOPE strives to reach its goal of providing evidence-based prevention programs to millions of preschoolers nationwide, we are also committed to alleviating the suffering of morbidly obese adolescents through state-of-the-art clinical treatment.
